The Stonewall Jackson of Broadway, New York, has his picture to-day right at the head of this column. The story of his life reads like tor in the great arena of New York's fighting a fairy tale. It has in it all the elements of world.

If Charles Dickens had known Chas. Rouss he would have put him in a book. So much the worse for Dickens. Say, a million dollars is a heap of money.— One dollar is a heap of money sometimes. But take a one dollar bill, stretch it out before you lion of them end to end, and they will reach

"It takes a money-maker to make money." Charles Broadway Rouss was born in Woodoro, Md., in 1835, without a cent in pocket." When very young he moved to Virginia, takng his father and mother with him. From his very babyhood he has been remarkable for his pluck, perseverance and push. In Winchester, Va., down in the very heart of God's country, the boy grew up to be a man. A worker from Workersville, Werk Township, check bobs up serenely.
